The Journal of ENVIRONMENT & DEVELOPMENT

A Review of International Policy

Special Issue: Environmental Reform in Asia

(June 2006, Vol. 15, No. 2)

SPECIAL ISSUE EDITORS:

David A. Sonnenfeld, Washington State University

Arthur P. J. Mol, Wageningen University

About the Special Issue:

The Asia Pacific region is unquestionably one of the most economically dynamic areas in the world. In the People's Republic of China, India, Malaysia, Vietnam, and, recently, Thailand, to name a few countries, the financial crisis of the late 1990s now seems only a small irritation in two decades of steady economic growth. The central questions that lay behind all contributions to this special issue are to what extent and especially how Asian industrializing and developing economies today have included environmental reforms in their development paths and trajectories. In investigating environmental reforms in Asian economies, the various contributions to this special issue use comparative methodologies to search for successes and failures in environmental governance and reform and to identify factors, actors, institutional designs, and circumstances that explain these successes and failures. Rather than comparing contemporary Asian economies with Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) countries in the past, the emphasis of most articles in this special issue is on specific environmental issues within a limited number of Asian countries, allowing for in-depth analyses of both successes and failures in environmental reform.

CALL FOR PAPERS

The Journal of Environment & Development (JED) welcomes original research contributions, policy analyses, and book reviews on all subject matters at the crossroads of environment and development, as well as occasional reports on important international conferences. For 2007-2008, JED is planning to focus on some of the subjects below, though consideration of submissions on a wide range of other subjects will continue:

- national climate, air pollution, and energy policies
- national implementation of Millennium Development Goals, Agenda 21, and sustainable development strategies
- environmental organizations and green parties in contemporary politics

Submission Policy: Authors submitting manuscripts to JED should keep the journal's broad interdisciplinary audience in mind, and articles should be written in an accessible style. JED will consider original manuscripts not previously published or currently under consideration elsewhere. Contributions presented at conferences and workshops are welcome as long as they are not published in the same form in conference proceedings or on the Internet. See detailed submission guidelines at <http://irps.ucsd.edu/jed/guidelines.php>. For further inquiries, email envdev@ucsd.edu.
