

Allan Bilka, RA

Allan is a Senior Staff Architect with the International Code Council. Having served ICC for over 8 years, he performs the following primary functions: Staff Liaison to the ICC-700 National Green Building Standard; Green Team member; ICC Green Building Web Page manager; instructor and speaker; book, workbook and code commentary developer; and code interpretation expert. He has written several ICC white papers regarding green building, authored numerous ICC green related articles, and has been interviewed, quoted and published in independent publications regarding green building, both in the U.S. and abroad.

A registered architect, Allan also has over 30 years of combined residential design/build and commercial consulting engineering experience. He attended Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana, where he was first exposed to alternative design, conservation and environmental principles. Allan began incorporating many of these principles, now know as “green building”, into his residential designs in 1984.
