Friday evening into Saturday morning we will follow the philosopher Sophie de Grouchy in search of the origins of sympathy, the principle element of morality and the key to ameliorating the suffering of others. Where Adam Smith leaves this aspect of the human moral impulse largely unspoken, de Grouchy gives it gentle voice in Letters on Sympathy (1798).

Our Saturday afternoon and evening discussions derive from Susan Fenimore Cooper’s reflections from the Mohawk Valley in northern New York state. Through a simple record of little events which make up the course of the seasons in rural life, Fenimore Cooper shows what it might mean to extend sympathy to the natural world and what a nation might be born of such sentiment, in Rural Hours (1887).

Finally on Sunday morning, Sarah Orne Jewett draws our theme of fellow feeling forward in an enchanting story that is nearly a poem. Sylvy keeps a secret to protect one small white heron and wonders whether the great wave of human interest which flooded for the first time this dull little life should sweep away the satisfactions of an existence, heart to heart with nature and the life of the forest in A White Heron (1910).

Join us in August, towards the quiet end of summer or in the high autumn of October. Guided field trips in each season include padding, hiking and birdwatching though our destinations will vary. Readings and discussion topics will remain the same.
