Project Narrative

The proposed project is relevant to public health because understanding gene regulation that contributes to the virulence or pathogenesis of Pseudomonas aeruginosa will provide new inroads to combat this pathogen. Therefore, the proposed project is relevant to the part of NIH’s mission that pertains to developing fundamental knowledge about the nature and behavior of living systems in order to enhance health, lengthen life, and reduce the burdens of illness.